Operational activities for development: operational activities for development of the United Nations system

Comprehensive statistical analysis of the financing of operational activities of the United Nations system: 2006 update

Report of the Secretary-General

Summary

The present report provides comprehensive financial data and analysis on contributions and expenditures for operational activities of the United Nations system. The report contains information on the 37 United Nations system entities that reported funding for operational activities for development, including humanitarian and environmental activities. It updates in an abbreviated form the report of the Secretary-General on the comprehensive statistical analysis of the financing of operational activities for development of the United Nations system (A/62/74-E/2007/54), with provisional 2006 financial data on core and non-core contributions and expenditures. It proposes the building of a comprehensive and sustainable financial data and reporting system on United Nations operational activities and concludes with a recommendation for the General Assembly's consideration for the secretariat (Department of Economic and Social Affairs) to do this.

The present report is submitted in compliance with General Assembly resolutions 32/197, 35/81 and 59/250 and Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/14. The report should be read in conjunction with the report of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations development system (A/62/73-E/2007/52) and its conclusions and recommendations (A/62/253).

I. Introduction

1. The present report provides 2006 financial data on contributions and expenditures for operational activities of the United Nations system. It updates in an abbreviated form the report of the Secretary-General on the comprehensive statistical analysis of the financing of operational activities for development of the United Nations system (A/62/74-E/2007/54), which was presented to the Economic and Social Council at its 2007 substantive session. It contains information on the 37 United Nations system entities that reported funding for operational activities for development, including humanitarian and environmental activities.[1] It is submitted in response to General Assembly resolutions 32/197, 35/81 and 59/250 and Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/14. The report should be read in conjunction with the report of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities of the United Nations development system (A/62/73-E/2007/52) and its conclusions and recommendations (A/62/253).

2. In years when the triennial comprehensive policy review is undertaken, the General Assembly is presented with a report containing provisional data on financing for operational activities for development for the previous year. The 2006 data are provisional because of the time needed to ensure the accuracy and consistency of all the disaggregated data reported in the replies of the different United Nations organizations. A full final updated report will be presented to the Economic and Social Council at its 2008 substantive session.

3. Efforts will be made to strengthen the Department of Economic and Social Affairs data collection system in order to report financial data in future to both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for the previous year, rather than with the two-year lag that has been the practice.

4. This report consists of four sections. Section I introduces the report; section II analyses the latest contributions trends; section III analyses the latest expenditure trends; and section IV, on building a comprehensive and sustainable financial data and reporting system on United Nations operational activities, discusses the progress by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the next steps towards improving systemwide data and their use. It concludes with a recommendation on improving the report and building a comprehensive and sustainable system for the consideration of the General Assembly.

II. Contributions

Total contributions 2006

5. The total value of contributions received by the United Nations system for operational activities in 2006 amounted to $15.8 billion (see table 1). This includes $615 million received by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crimes (UNODC), entities that had not been covered in previous reports. Contribution figures for earlier years for two of these United Nations entities will be obtained for future reports so as to include them in trend analyses.

Overall contribution trends

6. Following the upward trend in overall contributions to the United Nations system for operational activities from 2002 to 2005, contributions declined modestly in 2006 (see table 2). Overall contributions fell in 2006 in both nominal terms (-1.8 per cent) and real terms (-4.3 per cent), when account is taken of the effect of both inflation and exchange rate movements on the value of income received. Decreases were reported by most United Nations entities, although the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) and UNAIDS registered substantial increased contributions. UNDP and UNICEF showed a decrease in real terms, although they registered modest increases in nominal (current dollar) terms. It can be seen that overall contributions in 2006 are still considerably greater, both in nominal and real terms, than the contributions in 2004 and earlier years for all the United Nations entities with the exception of the World Food Programme (WFP). The overall funding decline from 2005 to 2006 was owed in part to the fact that 2005 was an unusual year in that it saw an exceptional humanitarian operational funding response to the Indian Ocean tsunami and the South Asian earthquake. UNDP, WFP, UNICEF and the combined specialized agencies continue to report the largest amount of contributions.

7. This report provides a more detailed analysis of the volume and trends in both the funding received and expended by United Nations entities than earlier reports. It presents data for 14 separate United Nations entities or groupings, as compared to the seven that were presented in previous reports, where a number of entities had been consolidated in the category "other funds and programmes". This is a step to provide more transparent entity-specific financial information that facilitates the tracking of income and expenditure flows within entities and comparing trends and patterns among them. It is planned that the next report will present information for each of the larger specialized agencies through an expanded collaboration with the specialized agencies, as is discussed in section IV.

Core and non-core contribution trends

8. In 2006, both core and non-core contributions to the United Nations system declined, non-core contributions declined for the first time, and the core share of total contributions was almost unchanged at 45 per cent (see figure). Systemwide core contributions in 2006 were at about the level they were in 2002 in real terms, while the volume of other resources grew substantially (see table 3).

9. In contrast with overall trends, UNICEF's regular/core contributions increased by 31 per cent in 2006 largely due to increased contributions from private sector sources through the extensive network of UNICEF national committees, thus exceeding the projected growth of the UNICEF financial plan.

[b] Core definition is based on UNHCR reporting to the High-level Panel on System-wide Coherence and budgetary reporting.

10. UNRWA, WFP and UNHCR reported the largest share of core contributions in 2006. However, the definition of core funding used by WFP is more inclusive than that used by others and classifies as core funding all funds intended for programmes that WFP has initiated. The core definition of UNHCR is based on its reporting to the High-level Panel on System-wide Coherence and budgetary reporting. The issue of seeking a common definition of core funds is referred to in section IV.

III. Expenditures

Total expenditures 2006

11. The expenditures of the United Nations system for operational activities in 2006 amounted to $14.5 billion (see table 6). This includes $711 million financed by UNEP, UNAIDS and UNODC, entities that had not been covered in previous reports. Expenditure figures for earlier years for two of these United Nations entities will be obtained for future reports so as to include them in trend analyses.

Overall expenditure trends

12. Overall expenditures of the United Nations system for operational activities in 2006 were almost the same as in 2005 in nominal terms, but fell in real terms, i.e. taking into consideration the effects of both inflation and exchange rate movements. Real decreases were reported by most United Nations entities, although UNDP, UNRWA, UNAIDS, UN-Habitat and IFAD are main exceptions. These decreases, following the considerable increases in 2005, echo the decreases in contributions over the same period, albeit with a time interval. However, overall expenditures in 2006 are still considerably greater, both in nominal and real terms, than they were in 2004 and previous years. Most of the United Nations entities, with the notable exception of WFP, report both nominal and real increases in expenditures compared to 2004 and previous years. UNDP, WFP, UNICEF and the combined specialized agencies continue to report the largest amount of expenditures (see table 7).

13. Table 7, on systemwide expenditures, has been expanded and disaggregated in the same way as was done with table 2, on contributions, in order to provide more entity-specific data trends for the years 2002 through 2006. Similarly, the 2008 General Assembly/Economic and Social Council report will also disaggregate the data for each of the major specialized agencies.

14. In 2006, the share of total expenditures on operational activities allocated to the least developed countries fell (see table 8). There had been a steady increase in their share every year since 2001 so that by 2005 nearly 40 per cent of the expenditures went to these poorest countries. In 2006, however, their share fell to just under 38 per cent. A decline has occurred in most of the United Nations entities, with UNICEF and UNFPA being the only exceptions. WFP, UNICEF and IFAD continue to report the largest share of expenditures allocated to the least developed countries.

IV. Building a comprehensive and sustainable financial data and reporting system on United Nations operational activities

Work and achievements

15. The three reports submitted to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in 2006 and 2007 (A/61/77-E/2006/59, A/62/74-E/2007/54 and A/62/253), on the financing of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, have introduced significant innovations, including a broader and disaggregated coverage of United Nations entities and a more extensive analysis of resource flows.

16. There has been substantial collaboration with the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) during the past year. There are a number of important differences between the way the United Nations and DAC define, classify and report contributions to the United Nations system. Thus, the two methods give very different pictures of the size of the United Nations system's budgets for development. As a first step towards harmonization, these differences were documented in the report of the Secretary-General on comprehensive statistical analysis (A/62/74-E/2007/54, sect. III) with the help of material provided by the two organizations. A partial reconciliation between the different estimates of the United Nations and OECD/DAC concerning the funding of the United Nations system provides a transparent description of their differences and the reasons for them.[2]

[2] Based on note on harmonizing United Nations and OECD/DAC data on contributions to the United Nations system by Beverley Carlson, Department of Economic and Social Affairs/Office of Economic and Social Council Support and Coordination, and Simon Scott and Julia Benn, OECD DAC/Statistics and Monitoring Division, which was presented for discussion to the DAC Working Party on Statistics at its meeting on 11 and 12 June 2007 and discussed in the report of the Secretary-General (A/62/74-E/2007/54).

17. The collaboration with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the inclusion of UNHCR data, with extended analyses of humanitarian assistance in the context of the operational activities of the United Nations system, has opened new avenues for the statistical analysis of operational activities and a better distinction between humanitarian assistance and funding for longer term development.

18. Work is going ahead on designing and putting into operation a relational database that will accelerate the preparation of the text and annex tables of the report and will greatly facilitate the access to and use of the data. The operational activities data will be available to serve a number of purposes, such as the annual ministerial-level substantive review, the biennial Development Cooperation Forum, the triennial comprehensive policy review, the Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) and the United Nations Development Group (UNDG), as well as the DAC Working Group on Aid Effectiveness and further Department of Economic and Social Affairs-OECD/DAC collaboration. More work is, however, still required, especially at the inter-agency level, particularly with the specialized agencies.

19. The Secretary-General has made the improvement of systemwide coherence a priority and his report on the recommendations of the High-level Panel on System-wide Coherence (A/61/836) calls for more coherence and synergy so that the United Nations can perform as one, with funding practices in place to support those efforts. This vision is predicated on overcoming fragmentation and duplication in the system. Strengthening of the comprehensive financial data and reporting system for operational activities is a concrete step in this direction.

Specialized agencies

20. The combined specialized agencies account for one of the largest shares of contributions for operational activities of the United Nations system. In 2006 they accounted for nearly a fifth of total contributions. Contributions to WHO alone reached $1.4 billion, making it the fourth largest United Nations organization after UNDP, WFP and UNICEF. However, these figures understate the actual contributions and expenditures of the specialized agencies, as they do not fully reflect a considerable part of their assessed contributions and related expenditures that are concerned with operational activities.

21. Considering that the combined 2005 assessments and contributions of all the specialized agencies amounted to more than $2 billion, these amounts need to be accounted for. To achieve this, it will be necessary to develop firmer definitions of what counts as financing of operational activities, including activities that relate to United Nations system normative work. Operational activities are strongly anchored in the normative mandates and roles given by Member States to the United Nations system, as underscored by the recommendations of the 2007 triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities of the United Nations development system (A/62/253), and the specialized agencies play a pivotal role in establishing normative standards in their respective specialized areas.

22. Accordingly, the data collection, analysis and reporting on the financing of operational activities need to include expanded coverage and reporting of the specialized agencies, and present more comprehensive and disaggregated data that will be obtained directly from them. This is the current practice being followed with the major United Nations funds and programmes. The Department of Economic and Social Affairs is pursuing consultations and cooperation with the leading specialized agencies to put this into effect. It is anticipated that the results of this collaboration will be reflected in the next report to be presented to the Economic and Social Council at its 2008 substantive session.

Next steps

23. This report on the financing of operational activities of the United Nations system has been an annual report of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs since 1980, and there is a pressing need to update some of the underlying concepts, definitions and classifications to better reflect the changing mandates and operations of the United Nations. In particular, there is an urgent need to make the data more transparent, consistent and timely, bringing them up to date with the current architecture of the United Nations system. A common standardized system of financial data and reporting on operational activities for all the United Nations entities needs to be established whereby all organizations can report their data using commonly agreed definitions that allow for a coherent accounting of the widely different mandates and operations of the nearly 40 United Nations system entities involved.

24. One of the most important challenges will be to reach agreement on the rules of inclusion of those resources that are for operational activities. A consensus also has to be reached on a common definition of core funds. Rules for avoiding the duplication of funds passing between organizations need to be reviewed as part of the ongoing debate between reporting these funds with the first receiving agency or with the final executing agency. The issues of self-supporting and cost-sharing contributions and expenditures, as well as pooled funding, need to be addressed. Further work may also need to be undertaken on the reporting of the contributions from the regional development banks and the distinction between humanitarian assistance and long-term development cooperation at the Economic and Social Council.

25. Enhanced and coherent understanding of the operational activities and trends in the development, humanitarian, environmental and peacekeeping work of the United Nations system calls for an acceleration of the current efforts by the organizations of the United Nations to standardize their data and statistical practices. Priority needs to be given to improving the coverage, timeliness and comparability of financial data and reporting on operational activities of the United Nations system.

Recommendation

26. As recommended in the report A/62/253 on the triennial comprehensive policy review, the General Assembly may wish to request the Secretary-General to:

(a) Continue to report on and improve the coverage, timeliness, quality and comparability of systemwide financial data, definitions and classifications for the financial reporting of operational activities for development of the United Nations system in a coherent and flexible way that is able to adjust to its changing architecture;

(b) Build a comprehensive and sustainable financial data and reporting system for the operational activities of the United Nations system to include all the relevant entities of the United Nations development system, working in close consultation and collaboration with these entities to accomplish this task.

Annex I

Harmonizing United Nations and Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development/Development Assistance Committee data on contributions to the United Nations system

1. There are a number of important differences between the way the United Nations and the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) define, classify and report contributions to the United Nations system. Thus, the two methods give very different pictures of the size of the United Nations system's budgets for development. As a first step towards harmonization, these differences are documented here with the help of material provided by the two organizations.[a]

Classification differences

Core versus non-core

2. In United Nations statistics, both core and non-core funding from Governments to the United Nations system are classified as contributions to the United Nations for its operational activities. DAC classifies only core contributions from Governments as multilateral aid to the United Nations system, while non-core contributions, sometimes called multi-bilateral assistance, are classified as bilateral aid.

3. The United Nations includes non-core contributions in its estimates because it considers that the purpose of both core and non-core Government contributions to the United Nations system is to support its operational activities. DAC classifies non-core contributions to the United Nations system as bilateral aid because it considers that donor Governments effectively control the use of non-core funds and that the United Nations agencies are channels of delivery, as opposed to recipients, of aid.

4. This difference in the treatment of non-core contributions is the most important single cause of differences between the data published by the two organizations. It is a source of confusion in resource accounting and studies on United Nations system performance, and the totality of DAC funding managed by the United Nations system is more than twice the DAC core funding figure (see table). Also, it can easily lead to errors in analyses of total flows; there is double counting if the DAC data on bilateral aid are added to the United Nations contributions data.

5. For example, the DAC Development Cooperation Report 2006 states that contributions of DAC member Governments to the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in 2005 were $717 million, whereas the Department of Economic and Social Affairs reported that contributions of DAC member Governments to UNICEF

[a] Based on note by Beverley Carlson, Department of Economic and Social Affairs/Office for Economic and Social Council Support and Coordination, and Simon Scott and Julia Benn, OECD DAC/Statistics and Monitoring Division, submitted for discussion to the DAC Working Party on Statistics at its meeting on 11 and 12 June 2007 and discussed in the report of the Secretary-General (A/62/74-E/2007/54, sect. III).

in 2005 were $2,415 million, a difference of $1,698 million.[b] However, included in the United Nations figure are non-core contributions of DAC member Governments to UNICEF of $1,617 million. If non-core contributions of DAC member Governments to UNICEF were excluded, the difference between the United Nations and the DAC data for UNICEF would be reduced to just $81 million. The situation is similar for other United Nations agencies. In fact, the non-core contributions to the United Nations system for all DAC member Governments combined in 2005, as shown in table 1, were $5.5 billion, all of which by definition have been included indistinguishably in DAC statistics on bilateral aid.

6. A similar problem arises when a United Nations agency establishes its own definition of core funding, as in the case of the World Food Programme (WFP), one of the largest United Nations funds. WFP treats contributions earmarked for programmes that it has initiated as core funding, and contributions earmarked for programmes that a donor has initiated as non-core funding. The United Nations uses the WFP definition and reports that contributions of DAC member Governments to WFP in 2005 amounted to $2,376 million, almost all defined by WFP as core. DAC treats only its members' contributions to WFP's multilateral "funding window" as core, i.e. as multilateral official development assistance (ODA). These amounted to $344 million in 2005. Furthermore, the United States, by far the largest donor to WFP, is not shown in DAC statistics as a donor to WFP at all because it reports its entire contribution to WFP as bilateral aid.

Contributions from other multilateral or regional agencies

7. Contributions from other multilateral or regional agencies are very important for the United Nations system, amounting to $1.5 billion in 2005, of which nearly $1 billion came from the European Commission (EC). These contributions, mainly non-core, are included in the United Nations figures but not in DAC statistics. DAC data measure multilateral flows at two points: the point of contribution by the national donor to the multilateral agency, and the point of disbursement by a multilateral agency to a recipient country. Transfers between multilateral agencies are not published as either contributions or disbursements to recipients. However, it would be helpful if information could be made available on the contributions by EC and other intergovernmental organizations to the United Nations system.

Non-Development Assistance Committee contributions (other than the "self-supporting" contributions discussed in A/62/74-E/2007/54, para. 28)

8. United Nations figures include contributions to the United Nations system from non-DAC countries that amounted to about $700 million in 2005. The amount shown in DAC data is only $158 million. The difference is owed partly to the inclusion in the United Nations figures of non-core contributions from non-DAC donors, but also to the fact that DAC does not receive data from some large non-DAC donors.

[b] See A/62/74-E/2007/54, para. 24.

Inclusion-exclusion differences

Self-supporting contributions

9. Some United Nations agencies receive contributions from non-DAC member Governments for expenditures in the contributing country. These are variously called self-supporting, local, cost-sharing or co-financing contributions and may indeed represent pass-through contributions from funding originally provided by development banks or bilateral donors. These are not measured in the DAC system and would not be treated as contributions to the United Nations, as DAC would have already classified them as contributions either directly to the recipient country or to the relevant development bank. The United Nations also uses the "originating donor" classification approach in order to avoid double counting, but this is done only among the agencies of the United Nations system where it is possible to disaggregate the source of funds. This is not always possible, as in the case of the UNDP local resources mentioned below.

10. It has been estimated that self-supporting contributions of this nature, found mainly in the Latin American region, were about $1.3 billion in 2005, of which a little over $1 billion was contributed through UNDP, although these figures were not separately reported, and a little under $300 million through the specialized agencies.

Non-governmental and private contributions

11. The United Nations data include contributions from NGOs and private organizations. In DAC statistics these are recorded under the category of private flows (i.e. not ODA), and those extended to the United Nations cannot be separately identified. These non-governmental and private contributions to the United Nations were at least $600 million in 2005.

Other issues

12. There are also other contribution issues currently under review, such as contributions to the United Nations system for thematic programmes, still mainly reported by DAC as bilateral aid but included in the United Nations financial statistics. As this and other issues are discussed in international and regional forums, the results will be analysed as part of the updating of the reporting situation in the next United Nations report.

13. On the basis of this analysis, it is possible to draw up a very rough 2005 reconciliation table between the United Nations and DAC data.

14. The use of different definitions and classifications by the United Nations and DAC means that the United Nations contributions data cannot be added to or compared with the DAC ODA data without considerable double counting. Because the United Nations total figure for 2005 is nearly three times greater than the DAC figure, the two data sets present a very different image of the scale of United Nations activities in recipient countries. It may be helpful if DAC statistics could in future provide an additional figure of the total flows that DAC countries channel through the United Nations system for development and other purposes. The total core and non-core flows to the United Nations reported to DAC would then approach the United Nations figure of $11.3 billion.

Annex II

Technical note or sources and coverage

1. This report contains information on the 37 entities[a] that reported receiving funding for operational activities for development, including for humanitarian and environmental activities.

2. Data on contributions and expenditures are obtained directly from the larger United Nations funds and programmes (UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF, WFP and, beginning in 2007, IFAD, UNHCR, UNRWA, UNCTAD UNEP, UN-Habitat and UNODC). Data on the contributions and expenditures of other United Nations system entities are mainly taken from their financial reports or derived from data on technical cooperation activities collected by the United Nations Development Programme from other United Nations organizations and reported in its annual report. For the next report, it is intended to obtain data directly from the specialized agencies.

3. Data on contributions refer to actual contributions for operational activities received in a given calendar year from Governments and other public and private sources to organizations in the United Nations system. In 2007, WHO revised its income recognition policy, whereby income is recognized upon signature of donor agreements and not when it is received. This change is reflected in this report.

4. Resource transfers from one entity of the system to another are excluded wherever possible in order to avoid double counting. Thus, resources channelled through the United Nations are reported as contributions (income) of the first receiving organization. This policy needs to be reviewed to consider a switch from a "first-in" to a "last-out" recognition, in order to link funding streams with programme performance at the country level.

5. Data on expenditures represent the support provided by these United Nations system organizations for operational activities. Programme support expenditures and administrative and other support costs are excluded. Contributions and expenditures are expressed in current United States dollars, unless otherwise stated.

6. Complete lists of the least developed countries by region, countries and territories by region, and countries and territories by income groups are provided in annexes I-III to the previous full report (A/62/74-E/2007/54).

7. The designations employed and the presentation of the material in the report do not imply the expression of any opinion whatsoever on the part of the Secretariat of the United Nations concerning the legal status of any country, territory, city or area of its authorities, or concerning the delimitation of its frontiers or boundaries. The term "country" as used in the report also refers, as appropriate, to territories or areas. A hyphen between dates representing years signifies the full period involved, including the beginning and end years.

[c] Primarily consists of income for which the source is not individually identified.
[d] Includes refunds and adjustments to income recognized in previous years.
[e] Under WHO's revised income recognization policy — income is recognized upon signature of donor agreements and not when it is received. Thus a total contribution of $374.5 million is not available on an individual donor basis and is therefore included as one amount for all donations.
[f] Includes unidentified.
[g] Excludes the imputed share of regular budget financing of technical cooperation expenditures by specialized agencies ($346.4 million).

[a] Primarily consists of income for which the source is not individually identified.
[b] Includes refunds and adjustments to income recognized in previous years.
[c] Under WHO's revised income recognization policy — income is recognized upon signature of donor agreements and not when it is received. Thus a total contribution of $374.5 million is not available on an individual donor basis and is therefore included as one amount for all donations.
[d] Includes unidentified.
[e] Excludes the imputed share of regular budget financing of technical cooperation expenditures by specialized agencies ($346.4 million).
